

Social Support Assessments

There are many ways to assess whether an individual may feel or be a risk to feel isolation from lack of social supports. Some midwives may simply ask in an interview about social support while other may want to 'collect data' at the beginning of the relationship and potentially throughout the relationship. On the next pages there are examples of different ways to assess social support and isolation potential. One way to decide for yourself how you assess social support in your practice is to complete different assessments yourself.

Social support and isolation are very important during pregnancy for women. Isolation may lead to stress, anxiety, and depression whereas social support may buffer women against these experiences. Social support is generally important for all of us as the human connection and feelings of acceptance shield us from pain, despair, and hopelessness.

Review the social support assessments in this packet, you may decide not to use any of these in your practice but they serve as jumping off points to how you'd address, foster, and facilitate social support in your practice and your own life.

Assessing Yourself

Friendships are important for stress management as well as overall happiness. Having someone to talk to when you're stressed, finding input on problems, and enjoying life with people you care about are all important. This worksheet is designed to help you take stock of your social life and make plans to strengthen your network of friendships. Below, make a list of the friends you have in your circle, and a quick note of the type of relationship you share:

Look At Your Patterns

If you don't have as many people in your circle as you'd like, or if your relationships aren't as close or supportive as you'd wish, ask yourself the following questions:

How would I like to change my social situation?

What are the reasons that my social situation isn't what I'd ideally like it to be?

What changes can I make to get more social support in my life?

Make Plans

Here, I'd like you to list a few lifestyle changes you can make to work friendships into your life more, and strengthen the relationships you have. (For example, 'become a better listener', or 'go out socially more often'.) Then, follow through on your plans. If necessary, pick one new priority a week until you have them all incorporated into your life:

Social Support Questionnaire

1. Who accepts you totally, including both your worst and best points?
2. Whom can you really count on to tell you, in a thoughtful manner, when you need to improve in some way?
3. Whom do you feel truly loves you deeply?
4. Whom can you really count to distract you from your worries when you feel under stress?
5. Whom can you really count on to help you feel more relaxed when you are under pressure or tense?
6. Whom can you really count on to care about you, regardless of what is happening to you?
7. Whom can you really count on to help you feel better when you are feeling generally down-in-the-dumps?
8. Whom can you count on to console you when you are very upset?
